

only bad for our study,but also bad for our health. So I'm writing to give some ideas on how we can cut down on noise at school.

I think the school can make some quiet zones in the library building and near classrooms. Clear signs can be put up to remind students to keep quiet. During breaks, teachers and student helpers can stand in busy areas, such as corridors and stairways, to remind students not to shout or run. What's more, softer music can be played during breaks.

If these ideas are carried out, our school will become a quieter and better place for everyone. I hope my ideas will be looked at.

Be well,
Li Hua

Climate change is a huge threat to polar bears, as they depend _____(1)_____ sea ice to hunt seals. As the world continues to warm and sea ice melts, these animals need to survive in a world with higher temperatures and _____(2)_____ ice. Adapting to these conditions is often the only way for polar bears to live in a changing environment.

Most polar bears live on the Arctic ice, including parts of Greenland. They rely on the sea ice to hunt animals like seals. However, as global temperatures rise, the sea ice _____(3)_____. If this continues, _____(4)_____ predict that polar bear populations could die out by 2050 unless they adapt quickly enough.

Scientists compared polar bear populations in northern and southern Greenland. In southern Greenland, the sea ice melts earlier each year, _____(5)_____ bears there are living with thinner sea ice. To understand how _____(6)_____ adapt, researchers analyzed DNA samples over 17 years.

They _____(7)_____ that some genes in southern bears were more active. These genes _____(8)_____ the bears' ability to deal with heat and _____(9)_____ important fat, a key resource when food is scarce.

Lead researcher Alice Golden called the results“_____ (10)_____”because they showed some polar bears possess the DNA to adapt to climate change. _____(11)_____ she said this is a “desperate survival mechanism”. “We still don't know how much the animals can adapt. If we don't take action right now, many polar bears _____(12)_____.”she said.
